GISEKIA, in botany, so named in honour of Paulus Dietericus Giseke, a genus of the Pentandria Pentagyuia class and or der. Natural order of Succulentae. Por tulaceae, Jussieu. Essential character: calyx five-lsaved; corolla none; capsule five, approximating, roundish,one-seeded. There is but one species, viz. G. pharnacioides, trailing Gisekia, an annual plant, and a native of the East Indies. GIVEN, among mathematicians and philosophers, the same with data. If a magnitude be known, or we can find another equal to it, it is said to be given in magnitude. Or when the position of any thing is known, it is said to be given in position: when the diameter or radins of a circle is known, the circle is given in magnitude. The circle is given in position, when the position of the centre is given. See Data. GLABRARIA, in botany, a genus of the Polyadelphia Polyandria class and order. Essential character: calyx five-cleft; petals five; nectary composed of bristles the length of the calyx; stamens thirty, always in sixes; pericarpinm a drupe. There is but one species, rir. G. tersa, a large tree resembling the camphor tree, the wood of which is very light and pale coloured, and not being liable to rot or to be injured by insects, it is much used for building both houses and ships. It is a native of the East Indies. GLACIERS. Those vast piles of eternal ice with which it has pleased the author of nature to crown the immense chasms between the summits of the Alps, objects more grand, sublime, and terrific, than are any others of the phenomena of nature which remain
